Turn the calendar back forty years!

"Silent Cal" Coolidge was last month elected president of the United States. Henry L. Whiffield is Mississippi's governor. Rudolph Valentino gallope across the flickering screen as "The Sheik." Something called "jazz" is the new music craze, but nobody thinks it will last.

People use electricity for light if at all. To most the naked incandescent bulb represents the ultimate in electric living. Undependable isolated generating plants operate, in many cases, only during the early hours of evening, and the cost of electricity is nearly prohibitive.

On December 29, 1924, a confident young company with faith in Mississippl announces that it is acquiring local electric plants with the ambittous plan of building and operating a unified, interconnected system.

The intervening ferry years have witnessed dramatic changes in our state and a sharp rise in the economic well-being of her citizens. Through it all, Mississippi Power Company has had the privilege of playing a vital role as the supplier of abundant, low-cost electric power to turn the wheels of industry, brighten the windows of commerce and increase the comforts and conveniences of the home.
